

Trilateral Conference DVPW, ÖGPW, SVPW – ETH Zurich – 14-16 February 2019

THE END OF THE WEST? LIBERAL ORDERS UNDER PRESSURE

In 1989, the "West" seemed to have become the undisputedly dominant formation of world politics. In 2019, it is under massive internal and external attack.

The "West" is defined by the interplay of liberal domestic and international orders. The common commitment to liberal human rights, the rule of law and democracy underpins the Western community of values; open and rights-based societies find their equivalent in an open and rights-based international order. The election of President Trump in the US and the Brexit referendum in the UK put in question the foundations of the "West" in two of its pioneering nations. The electoral successes of populist parties challenge the liberal state, European integration and the liberal international order from within; from outside, it is the emerging China and an assertive Russia.

The congress sets itself the task of investigating the development of domestic and international liberal regimes, their interaction and the crisis of the "West" from a political science perspective and in collaboration with the Austrian, German, and Swiss political science associations.

Conference languages are German and English.

Call for Panels/Papers

You are warmly invited to submit your proposals for panels and papers at the conference website. The closing date is 30 June 2018. The website also provides additional information about the conference.

Panel proposals (with 3-4 papers, chair and discussant) can be submitted by members, working groups or sections of at least two associations. Panel proposals are given priority over single papers.

Please contact the conference team in case of questions.